

Pleae do not weaken the Wisconsin No Call list. It is not nearly strong enough as it is. Allowing companies to contact for 18 months after I discontinue business with them is an extremely long time. If I wanted to continue contact with them, I would not have terminated the affiliation I had. At most, they should be allowed one month.

The Wisconsin law, with its one call limit, is a much better way to handle terminated relations. If I still want to deal with the business, I can call them. There is absolutely no reason for the business to continue to harass me for eighteen months.
